Self-Love Guide to Abundance
“You can search throughout the entire universe for someone who is more deserving of your love and affection than you are yourself, and that person is not to be found anywhere. You yourself, as much as anybody in the entire universe deserve your love and affection.”
~ Buddha
The Real “Secret” to Attracting Abundance

All of us have dreams of abundance. The vast majority of people dream of having lots of money, so that they can have the option of buying the things they want. They dream of having a beautiful house, an expensive car, limited-edition watches and taking beachfront holidays several times a year. It’s not all material of course. They also dream of having a loving spouse, a happy family and like-minded friends for support.

Then, there are those of us who would like to honor our heart-centered dreams and the best way to go about them is to work for ourselves, rather than hold a job in a firm. As conscious individuals, we also have the dream of making a positive difference to the world. The benefits of being an entrepreneur are extremely appealing. With an entrepreneurial lifestyle, we will be able to work on our terms. We can have the option of working as and when we want to.

Unfortunately, many of us are far from attaining these dreams. Instead, we are in a state of struggle. We may have such wonderful dreams but no matter how many hours we spend, we face tremendous challenges with bringing them into fruition. Eventually, we come to experiencing bitterness, frustration and anger. We feel like failures when we compare ourselves with those, who have started out later, but who have already succeeded.

So why is it so easy for some people but not for you?

Do you repeatedly lament of “not having enough”?

Self-Love Guide to Abundance 4
What is the missing “secret” to attracting abundance?

You see. I have had the same dreams. I had hoped that my journey into entrepreneurship would be like one of those that are often described in sales pitches: smooth, fast and easy. Well, it did not quite happen that way.

Let me share some background. I was formerly in the banking industry. My job had provided me a paycheck that allowed me a reasonably comfortable lifestyle; which included a club membership, a car and nice holidays.

However, I decided to make a change after my children were born. I chose the path of self-employment, so that I can be the main caregiver to my children. I soon found myself working much harder than before. I did not realize that there was so much to learn and implement. In my online business alone, I had to wear multiple hats from putting up websites, blogging, marketing, troubleshooting, creating products, handling customer service and so on.

I also became rather torn. I was stressed out from having to balance between entrepreneurship and family. Although I was happy with having flexible hours, I was not contented with how things were going.

In the process, I experienced a whole slew of negative emotions. I realized that I had a number of limiting beliefs that I had to address. I was increasingly miserable.

At the height of my misery, I decided that enough was enough. I realized that I had to do things differently if I wanted a different set of results. I chose to focus less on work but more on myself. It was during this period that I watched the movie “The Secret”. After a couple of false starts, I finally made the decision to commit to my personal healing journey.

I became aware of how disconnected I felt from being engaged in schemes that preyed on people’s dreams of getting rich quick. Also, I realized the importance of discerning from a bunch of advice from online marketers. Clearly, what has worked for them does not mean that it would necessarily be best for me. And so, on my path towards greater authenticity, I had to determine what my values, dreams and vision are.

At first, I spent many hours working through my own internal issues, with the help of a practitioner. I also went for different kinds of alternative healing therapies. What was great was that I was able to experience energetic shifts that allowed me to feel better.

Still, there was something “missing” that I could not put my finger on.

There were sabotaging patterns that I kept getting stuck in.

I still could not determine what the root cause of my issues were, despite the healing work that I have done so far. By then, I was also undergoing certifications in life coaching and Neuro-Linguistic Programming. These helped me with belief changes but did not provide me with the answer that I was seeking.
Nonetheless, I found that I was able to sit quietly to contemplate my issues without any attachment. A regular practice of meditation was clearly helping me raise my level of awareness. I was able to get answers and ideas while in a sublime state of relaxation.

I began to see what was missing.

Finally, light penetrated through the shadowed landscapes of my inner journey.

And the answer?

Self-love.

It is easy to understand why.

If we are in self-resentment and cannot accept ourselves, then it is hard to attract abundance.

Abundance carries the frequency of pure love. To attract abundance, we need to offer a matching vibration. By virtue of the universal law of attraction, like attracts like. And so, if we are vibrating fear from being in a state of lack, there is no way that we cannot attract abundance.

Eventually, I posted an article on my site on “How to Love Yourself in 17 Ways”. Thousands of people responded with liking and sharing it on social media. I have been immensely grateful for the positive response.
The response spurred me to do deeper work into this area. I went on to publishing the book, Self-Love Secrets: How to Love Yourself Unconditionally. Many wrote to me about how it has helped them with increased awareness.

My intent is now to help those who face difficulties with manifesting abundance through self-love healing.

So, if you are one of those who need more answers to the difficulties that you are facing with your life, read on.
Symptoms of Low Self-Love

Ask yourself if any one or more of the following situations true of you? –

- You criticize yourself constantly.
- You believe that you are not good enough.
- You do not believe that you are lovable.
- You have low self-confidence.
- You feel de-energized, exhausted and ill constantly.
- You cannot trust your own judgment.
- You are constantly worrying.
- You have got low expectations for yourself.
- You often put your own needs last.
- You suffer from heart problems.
- You have a negative attitude.
- You often operate out of a fear of rejection.
- You have anxiety or panic attacks.
- You cannot function well in social groups.
- You downplay your gifts, talents and abilities.
- You suffer from bouts of depression or sudden and inexplicable bouts of sorrow.
- You constantly crave the approval of others.
- You set aside your own desires in order to please others.
- You dull pain and feelings of unworthiness through addictive behavior such as smoking, sex and shopping.

Without some level of awareness, you may not have realized that the above are simply signs of a deeper root cause of inadequate self-love. You may even protest that you already love yourself. Well, become aware that self-love rests on a continuum. All of us – unless you are already enlightened – do have some issues with loving ourselves in one way or another. The difference lies in the level or the extent.

Let’s do a simple test. What happens when you look in the mirror? Are you mostly engaged in positive or negative self-talk? If all you can notice are flaws and have nothing good to say about yourself, then you could be having self-love difficulties.

Alternatively, you could be feeling like a victim. It happens when you believe that everyone seems to have better luck than you. You are not able to let go of the fact about your lack of success, accomplishments and achievements. Because you believe that you are missing some important gene or are unfortunate enough to be born into circumstances that are less than favorable, you think it impossible to catch up. In self-pity, you become shrouded in negativity. You are caught in the “poor me” syndrome.
7 Obstacles to Loving Abundance

So what are the obstacles to receiving abundance? What is preventing you from opening your heart to loving yourself more fully, thereby manifesting more abundance into your life?

"Your task is not to seek for love, but merely to seek and find all of the barriers within yourself that you have built against it." – Rumi

1. Negative Self-Talk

If you are not already aware of what you say to yourself, spend a day or two recording down your self-talk. With your thoughts on paper, it is easier to make some important self-discovery.

"Of all the judgments we pass in life, none is more important than the judgment we pass on ourselves.” ~ Nathaniel Branden

Your negative self-talk could look something like the following:
- “I am such a freak.”
- “I am a failure.”
- “I am stupid.”
- “I am so lousy.”
- “I am hopeless.”
- “I do not deserving love and support.”
- “I cannot believe how useless I am.”
- “Who would want me – so poor, ugly and awkward?”
- “I just hate my body.”
- “No one has an uglier nose.”
- “I am so fat.”
- “I am not cut out to be a leader.”
- “I do not deserve anything better.”

And so, you find yourself believing that “I am not lovable”, “I am not good enough” or “I am not worthy”. You face great obstacles with moving forward everyday.

Indeed, all the talk about goal setting, how to be successful and making money quick is best set aside until you are able to access the loving reservoir inside. It is hard to function well when you are your greatest enemy.

There is a popular saying: you must love yourself before you can love another. You may find this saying odd at first especially if it does not match with your experience. Your experience has shown that while you cannot love yourself, you have been able to love others. In fact, if you are a parent, you know yourself to be capable of giving love to your children even though you do not love yourself fully.

But, think of it this way. Love is a service from your heart. Obviously, it can be rather difficult to render service to others when you are in a leaking boat yourself. You will not be in a position to help others effectively if you are not feeling centered from within. Should you persist in rendering assistance to others anyway, you are likely to end up feeling depleted.

Self-Love Guide to Abundance
As best-selling author, Barbara De Angelis, said, “If you aren’t good at loving yourself, you will have a difficult time loving anyone, since you’ll resent the time and energy you give another person that you aren’t even giving to yourself.” It is true. You will feel depleted if you are constantly giving others what you cannot give to yourself. There will be no reserves to dig into.

Eventually, you are led to experiencing resentment. And from a place of resentment, your giving becomes conditional. Even though you do not say it, you quietly hope for something of equivalent benefit in return. Your loved one or friend does not know it of course. They have no knowledge that you have been building anger underneath the false appearance of a smile.

Studies have shown that most of us make 300-400 self-evaluations per day. About 80% of the evaluations are negative. Thus, chances are that if you have picked up this report, you are likely to be engaged in negative self-talk.

If you are constantly belittling and criticizing yourself, it is hard to love yourself. You cannot be harsh and loving at the same time. It is one or the other.

2. Your Limiting Beliefs

Many of the beliefs that you currently hold have probably been developed since childhood. You base your life scripts on the messages that you have accepted. The inner voices that have influenced your self-talk have been echoing since you were a child. These voices mainly come from your parents, caregivers, figures of authority such as teachers and mentors and the media.

Take, for instance, the influence by the media. By being exposed to ads that emphasize the importance of looking beautiful non-stop, it is possible that you develop low self-esteem. And so, you start to compare your body proportions with the models in fashion magazines. You do not realize that most of these pictures have been photoshopped, altered or airbrushed.

Through an inability to accept your own body, you face the increased risk of developing eating disorders such as anorexia. You punish yourself with strict diet or extreme exercise regimes. Starving yourself of food takes place because you are essentially starved of love. Eating disorders are very often symptoms of the deeper root cause – a case of inadequate of self-love.

3. Myths about Loving Yourself

You may hold certain myths that obstruct your way to greater self-love. For one, many have mistaken beliefs about what self-love means. It may be the same for you too, especially if you wonder why you continue to face challenges with loving yourself when you have been engaged in acts of self-care. And so you equate self-love to acts of pampering yourself. Maybe it means getting a body massage, having your hair done or getting a manicure. Or it may mean buying yourself the latest tech gadget or upgrading to a bigger car.

Obviously, such acts of self-care can bring about pleasure. However, the effects of pleasure derived from material items do not usually last long. You may experience a jab of joy but it fizzles out. You are off looking for the next item that will satisfy you. Thus, it can seem as if you are perpetually on the hunt for one item after another, in your search for happiness.

Self-love is more than a temporary fix on your senses. It is not externally derived but comes from the inside. When you learn to love yourself truly, you do not have to depend on external factors. Your foundation is solid. You are centered in your being.

Another confusion that you may have lies with thinking that self-love means narcissism. Perhaps you have been taught not to focus on the self because it may mean becoming narcissistic. You also do not welcome the idea of being known as someone who is selfish.

Well, there is a difference between healthy self-love and narcissism. They are not the same thing. You need to understand the difference.

The narcissist is someone who is full of hot air, operates out of ego and loves to attract attention. He is excessively self-centered with issues of personal inadequacy, power, and vanity. He is fueled on an empty tank. He needs to depend on others to make him feel worthy.

Conversely, someone with healthy self-love is not boastful, and is one who cultivates a sense of quiet confidence. This person does not need others to tell him how good he is. He does not have to devise crafty strategies to win love because he already has enough self-assurance. He knows that he is worthy. Most importantly, he operates from the paradigm of love.

When you begin to realize what the difference is, you are less likely to put yourself in the way of self-love. You understand that in the practice of healthy self-love, balance is essential. You learn to nurture your own dreams but do not do so in a selfish manner. You are considerate to the needs of others, but not sacrifice your own well-being in the process.

4. Negative Emotions

Negative emotions such as depression, sadness, frustration, anger, shame, guilt, regret and so on can cloud your ability to love yourself. Consequently, you cannot forgive yourself, you blame yourself and you find it hard to function well on a social basis.

Obviously, it becomes hard to have clarity when you are overwhelmed emotionally. From being clouded, you are not able to stand apart to gain a better perspective. Negative emotions tend to feed off themselves. You find yourself in a spiral downwards. You become stuck in a hole that is difficult to climb out. Your performance at work suffers as a result.

And so you attract outcomes that vibrationally match what you are feeling, by virtue of the Law of Attraction. Through these outcomes, you become even more convinced of being unlovable and unworthy. You now have greater physical proof.
Addressing your negative emotions is necessary in order to gain clarity. When you get less hung up by your own internal issues, you experience a lightness. You enjoy a freedom that you have not experienced before. You become free to love yourself fully.

5. The Problem of Perfectionism

Expecting yourself to be perfect in every way can obstruct your way to greater self-love. Through wanting to be perfect, you strive to be the top, error-free and produce work that is impeccable. You would invariably find that the standards you have set are unattainable.

And so you develop a sense of discontentment. It becomes pervasive. The suffering is endless because you are never ever fully satisfied with your actions, behavior or achievements. You are in the perpetual state of feeling incomplete and unfulfilled. Happiness becomes elusive.

Do not be mistaken. Note that there is nothing wrong with wanting to produce your best work or hoping to present yourself in a good light. However, having a perfectionistic streak can have negative consequences.

Because you are expecting perfection, you tear yourself apart when you do not meet a certain standard. You are merciless when it comes to judging the self. Your standard is usually unreasonably high. You expect that the work you produce or who you are to be superior to others.
In your strive for perfection, you lose the sense of perspective. You are fearful of losing out. Your fear may even prevent you from taking action. You would rather not start work than risk being imperfect.

You will need to understand the difference between pursuing perfectionism and the desire for excellence. Perfectionism is in a way, an unattainable goal. The desire for excellence is a better way forward. In the spirit of excellence, you go for continuous improvements and aim to produce your best work possible.

When you learn to love yourself, you do not crucify yourself with harsh judgments. Instead, you become more accepting of the parts about you that are imperfect. You give yourself allowance for errors, mistakes or failings. You are willing to forgive yourself more readily.

6. Inability to Open Your Heart to Receive

Past traumas can prevent you from opening your heart. You are afraid of being hurt again. Admittedly, no one likes feeling vulnerable. The memory of raw pain still haunts you. So you prefer to shield yourself from another possible attack. You build a fortress around your heart that prevents you from receiving love.

An inability to receive may well be what is missing in your ability to experience abundance. Perhaps too, you have been taught from an early age that it is wrong, shameful or a sin to be receiving. Instead you have been taught the virtues of giving only. You learn about being kind, considerate and helpful to others.

If you close your heart to receiving, it is impossible to enjoy more joy, peace and happiness in your life. Yet, fear holds you back. You are afraid about meeting with pain when you open your heart. You are afraid that others will take advantage of your vulnerability.

Then again, suffering is a choice. You need to be able to see that there is beauty that comes out from painful times. To receive love does not mean that you be foolish or reckless. Instead, you learn about developing healthy and balanced self-love, with the awareness that you are lovable enough to receive love from others too.

Receiving rests on a belief that you are worthy. Your ability to receive does not have to depend on you fulfilling some condition or criteria. Just like anyone else, you are deserving of love. There is no need for any conscious work. Put simply, you allow yourself to receive. When you practice the art of allowing, you find yourself receiving an inexhaustible supply of love, support and kindness. You come to know that the universe is one of great abundance.

7. Lack of Spiritual Connection

Ultimately, an inability to love the self adequately can be hampered by a lack of spiritual connection. Conversely, with a spiritual connection, you are able to experience divine love. It does not matter whether you have a religion or not. What is more important is the ability to connect with source from the heart.
When you can do so, you become aware of how unconditional love and acceptance feels like. You are in a better position to love and accept yourself completely.

I had at one stage experienced all the obstacles mentioned above. From working through my obstacles, I was able to experience a business turnaround, more loving relationships and great connections with spiritually minded coaches and experts in the transformational field. I love what I do and overall, I have been experiencing greater fulfillment in life.

Notably, my insights into the core issue of self-love came about when I started reviewing my own past history. I had shared about my insights in the post that had generated positive feedback on my site. The following is what my post says...

How to Love Yourself in 17 Ways

(This section was first published as a post on my blog.)

I have compiled a list on “how to love yourself” for readers who are facing difficulty with knowing what to do in embracing themselves. When I first began to be aware that I needed to love myself first prior to developing any meaningful relationships with others, I realized that I did not know where to start. I was surprised as I would have thought I’d be an expert on love and relationships by then. After all, as I recalled, in my younger days, I have spent much time looking for the best spouse or romantic partner.
I subsequently realized that my external search was meant to fill the void or emptiness I had inside. Finding a good relationship with myself seemed an even harder task! As things eventually turned out, I found myself failing miserably in my early relationships because I had insufficient or little self-love.

As I gained greater awareness, I discovered that self-esteem and self-love are issues that are often related together. If you suffer from low self-esteem, it is possible that the root cause is a case of insufficient self-love. And so, you have found it difficult to find that little bit of love for yourself. Loving yourself feels unnatural for a start because your mind has been ingrained with self-sabotaging thoughts for the longest time.

However, nothing is going to happen if you do not make a conscious decision. And that includes attracting abundance. When you don’t love yourself, you are basically telling the Universe that you are unworthy or undeserving of any love or positive outcomes that have the same vibrational match as love.

Learning to love yourself starts with making a conscious decision, an intention to become happy and lead a fulfilled life. When you do not love yourself and suffer from low self-esteem, it is almost impossible to ever reach the potential that you suspect you have.

“Love yourself first and everything falls into line.”

Lucille Ball quotes (American radio and motion-picture actress and comedy star, 1911-1989)

When you make a decision to love yourself, you are really saying that you want to come alive. You accept that you are responsible for the outcomes that you experience in your life and would like yourself to shine from living a fulfilling life.

So if you’ve decided on loving yourself but are as equally stumped on how to love yourself, as I was back then, here are 17 ways which I believe can be helpful:

1. Fall in love with yourself. Think about what makes you You. Just like a flower that needs watering to grow, learn to nurture yourself in every way. Love yourself for all the good that you see and accept your flaws and the fact that you are imperfect. This does not mean that you do not need to change from your shortcomings; instead, you are being gentle and kind to yourself despite all your “flaws”. Look in the mirror and fall in love with the reflection that is You.

   “To love oneself is the beginning of a life-long romance.”
   Oscar Wilde quotes (Irish Poet, Novelist, Dramatist and Critic, 1854-1900)

2. Eliminate Self Criticism. Do you often berate yourself over the tiniest thing? Is there a little voice inside your head that often tells you that you are no good because you are stupid or make mistakes? If you find that you criticize yourself often, make an effort to stop the self criticism.

   “I CAN is 100 times more important than IQ.” — unknown

3. Be Kind And Positive. When you start to think kindly and positively about yourself, the love you have for yourself just grows. Make it a habit to praise yourself everyday, while in the front of the mirror. Because of such thoughts, you naturally undertake empowering actions that support your development.
4. Acknowledge Your Effort. It is not always about winning or coming up tops in everything that you do. Many times, it is the effort that counts! Acknowledge that you have done your best, even if you have failed to produce tangible results.

5. Let Go Of Worry. Loving yourself requires you to let go of your worry. It is a horrible way to live a life filled with constant worrying. I can attest to that! Worry does not help in any way. It cannot, on its own, make things happen. Only wise actions can! So instead of worrying, spend time thinking about what you can do to help in the situation. If the situation is beyond your control, then make a request to the Universe/God about what you want. Next, surrender your outcome.

“There is only one way to happiness and that is to cease worrying about things which are beyond the power of our will.” — Epictetus quotes (Greek philosopher associated with the Stoics, AD 55-c.135)

6. Trust Yourself. Have confidence in your abilities. Know that you have the ability to make important changes for yourself, for as long as you put your heart to it. You can also support yourself by visualizing desired outcomes.

“Trust yourself. You know more than you think you do.”- Benjamin Spock (American Pediatrician and Author, 1903-1998)

7. Forgive Yourself. If you have made mistakes in the past that had caused you to feel less worthy, then you need to forgive yourself. All of us make mistakes; so there really is no need to beat yourself up over them. Also, if you have been carrying around a baggage of emotional hurt because of a childhood trauma, learn to forgive yourself.
“To forgive is to set a prisoner free and discover that the prisoner was you.”

Lewis B. Smedes

8. Be Truthful To Yourself. Loving yourself requires you to be truthful about your own feelings. If you are happy, acknowledge the joy. If you are sad, acknowledge the sorrow. When you are truthful about your feelings, you do not try to lie to yourself or seek to bury your negative emotions. Instead, acknowledging what you feel provides a good guide to what your thoughts are. And as we all know, thoughts can be changed, so that healing and self-growth can take place.

9. Grow Spiritually. When you spend time growing spiritually, loving yourself becomes automatic. You become more peaceful, connected, kind, loving and compassionate. You nurture a mind that grows more beautiful by the day. You naturally love yourself in the process.

10. Make Positive Affirmations Everyday. Reframe your mind with positive affirmations. For instance, say this to yourself “I love and accept myself completely and unconditionally.” Read your affirmations out loud several times a day.

11. Express Gratitude. Express gratitude for the person that you are. For instance, cultivate an appreciation for your strengths and gifts. Also, feel a sense of gratitude that you are alive and well, and fully capable of making a difference in your life.

12. Nurture Your Dreams. Why deny yourself your dreams? When you nurture your dreams, you would love the life that you are leading. Every moment that you live is a joy because you are expressing yourself fully.
“Twenty years from now you will be more disappointed by the things that you didn’t do than by the ones you did do. So throw off the bowlines. Sail away from the safe harbor. Catch the trade winds in your sails. Explore. Dream. Discover.”
—Mark Twain

13. Boost Your Self Confidence. Make a deliberate attempt to look for opportunities that can help improve your confidence. For instance, if you are particularly good at doing something, set aside more time to indulge and improve your skills on it. Knowing that you have particular gifts can boost your self-esteem.

14. Relax. Give yourself space to take breaks every now and then. If you spend your time working, without paying attention to your health, it also means that you do not love yourself well enough to take care of your own body. Fill your time with silence, soothing music and visions of beauty; anything that nourishes your Soul.

15. Have Fun. Inject some fun into your life. Life is meant to be an enjoyable.
Don’t take life or yourself too seriously. If you can think of life in this manner, you automatically relax and quit worrying over things that do not matter.

16. Look After Your Body. It is important that you strengthen yourself with proper nutrition and regular exercise. Your body is a temple and you should treat it with respect, love and care. It has been found that the lack of self love is often the root causes of conditions like eating disorders, obesity or even terminal diseases.
“Take care of your body. It’s the only place you have to live.”
Jim Rohn quotes (American Speaker and Author. He is famous for motivational audio programs for Business and Life.)

17. Learn To See Beauty. When you learn to see beauty in every thing, you will also see beauty in yourself. Hence, stop to smell the flowers. Notice everything. Feel everything. The pink blush of the flowers in your garden, the greenness of the plains, the whisper of the gentle wind, or the myriad hues of an evening sky.
Benefits from Having Self-Love

Studies have found that someone in love experience changes in levels of serotonin and dopamine, which are linked to feelings of happiness and wellness. Although these studies did not make a distinction on which aspect of love, I suspect that the same results similarly applies to self-love too.

More specifically, the following benefits arise from having self-love:

1. You enhance your ability to attract love and thereby, abundance. When you have a healthy and loving presence, others are naturally attracted to you. Including your clients, friends, associates, bosses, loved ones and family. You have everyone rooting for you.

2. You enhance your ability to receive abundance. By knowing yourself as deserving, you are ready to accept blessings from the universe with an open heart.

3. You are less liable to be stuck. Loving yourself involves the practice of forgiveness. Thus, it requires a release from the past. You view the past not as failures but as learning opportunities for growth. Doorways to abundance start to open up, when you become open to new ideas.
Self-Love in the Body, Mind and Spirit

Self-love is food for your mind-body-soul, the nourishment that you need even before you attempt to do anything great or anything at all. You are full. When you love yourself, it shows. You gain a natural glow. By giving yourself the permission to be authentic, you also allow others to be who they really are. Through your being, you inspire others to love themselves.

Self-love requires accepting yourself fully. You learn about embracing yourself – both the beautiful and not-so-beautiful parts about yourself. As Vietnamese Zen Master, Thich Nhat Hanh, said, “To be beautiful means to be yourself. You don’t need to be accepted by others. You need to accept yourself.”

The balm of self-love will heal your psychological wounds. You will experience the rewards of greater joy, happiness, peace, acceptance, intimacy and warmth. You experience true abundance from within. You develop healthy self-assurance that will be an excellent springboard for you to attract more abundance into your life.
Self-Love Affirmation Prayer

Here is a good affirmation to read and reflect on.....

“I am Me. In all the world, there is no one else exactly like me. Everything that comes out of me is authentically mine, because I alone chose it — I own everything about me: my body, my feelings, my mouth, my voice, all my actions, whether they be to others or myself. I own my fantasies, my dreams, my hopes, my fears. I own my triumphs and successes, all my failures and mistakes.

Because I own all of me, I can become intimately acquainted with me. By so doing, I can love me and be friendly with all my parts. I know there are aspects about myself that puzzle me, and other aspects that I do not know — but as long as I am friendly and loving to myself, I can courageously and hopefully look for solutions to the puzzles and ways to find out more about me.

However I look and sound, whatever I say and do, and whatever I think and feel at a given moment in time is authentically me. If later some parts of how I looked, sounded, thought, and felt turn out to be unfitting, I can discard that which is unfitting, keep the rest, and invent something new for that which I discarded. I can see, hear, feel, think, say, and do. I have the tools to survive, to be close to others, to be productive, and to make sense and order out of the world of people and things outside of me.

I own me, and therefore, I can engineer me. I am me, and I am Okay.”

Secrets to Self-Love

“Wouldn’t it be powerful if you fell in love with yourself so deeply that you would do just about anything if you knew it would make you happy? This is precisely how much life loves you and wants you to nurture yourself. The deeper you love yourself, the more the universe will affirm your worth. Then you can enjoy a lifelong love affair that brings you the richest fulfillment from inside out.” ~ Alan Cohen

If you have difficulty with self-love, you are not alone.

After publishing my post on “How to Love Yourself in 17 Ways” on my blog, I received more than 1,000 emails over a three-year period. Through the emails, I found out that many people around the world share the same difficulty with loving themselves too. I subsequently wrote a book to record my findings and insights.

In my book, Self-Love Secrets, I reveal more secrets to loving the self in body, mind and spirit. You will learn about:

- Dispelling the 6 myths or misconceptions on self-love;
- Differences between self-love, esteem and confidence;
- What 10 negative self-talk patterns you can possibly have;
- What 3 core beliefs are driving your actions and behavior;
- Flipping your negative self-talk to a positive one;
- Keys to a holistic approach to self-love; and much more.

About the Author

Evelyn Lim assists women who are struggling with manifesting the wealth and abundance that they want. She helps them remove their deep-rooted patterns, so that they can more easily attract their dreams. As a Life Vision Coach, she uses a unique combination of energy healing, intuition and belief-change techniques for lasting results.

Evelyn Lim is also a Certified Master Neuro-Linguistic Programming Practitioner, Certified EFT Practitioner, and Intuitive Consultant. She is the author to the book, Abundance Alchemy: Journey of Gold (available as an instant download or on Amazon), Self-Love Secrets and a co-author to Adventures in Manifesting: Success and Spirituality (alongside other authors such as Dr Joe Vitale and Dr Fred Alan Woof – both teachers from the movie “The Secret” - and Dr Brian Tracy).
